BERLIN AGAIN

After being out of the news for so long that most people, we would wager, had forgotten that there had ever been such a problem, Berlin has once again become the centre of the world's attention.

The storm signals are hoisted over this unique city, divided between East and West, where in 1948 the greatest airlift of all time was staged by the West in a successful resistance against Communist efforts at a take-over.

We nearly went to war once over Berlin. Do we still stand where we did on this question?

The answer is a most emphatic "Yes." The rights and freedom of some 2,000,000 people in West Berlin are still of paramount importance not only to themselves but to the whole Free World, to whom they are a symbol.

If we give way on Berlin, we may as well pack up on every front—and there are many of them—where communism and democracy stand opposed to each other.

More serious

There is no hiding the gravity of the situation. If anything, it is more serious in 1961 than it was when the Russians first showed their hand over Berlin.

And the West is no more interested today in doing a deal with the Communist world over Berlin than it was at that time.

This is the attitude of every person who believes in freedom.

But it would be foolish to declare that the West is united over this issue. Here and there voices have been raised—the voices of those whose concept of freedom is not all that it should be.

"Why should we worry about West Berlin?" they demand. "The place isn't worth a world war. If the Russians want a new set-up in the city, let them have it. Their proposals are not unreasonable, after all."

On the face of it, the Russian demands on Berlin are not unreasonable; it must be admitted. After all, Hitler's war has been over a long time and it is about time we got together and settled the argument over this sore spot.

What's the point of keeping Western troops in a city where they are surrounded by Red forces and could be swamped in a few hours—or minutes? And so on, and so on.

But there is another aspect to this situation. It is not only a matter of a city, a physical feature on a map.

Freedom

It is that vastly more important thing—freedom. Now freedom is something for which we have fought two major wars in a lifetime. Men will suffer and die for freedom. And men will suffer and die for Berlin if need be.

We hope it never comes to that because war is a foul and bloody thing and only a madman would deliberately start another world outbreak.

But if we were to give way over Berlin our whole position against communism would crumble overnight. No place would be safe any more.

We have given away enough to the Reds since the war ended in 1945. There must be no more white flags.

TROPICAL
HONGKONG

The depression that formed some 600 miles off Hongkong last night intensified this morning into a tropical storm, a Royal Observatory spokesman said today.

In a gale warning issued this afternoon the Observatory said that the storm was centred near 14.6 degrees north and 114.6 degrees east at noon.

This places it some 460 miles south of Hongkong.

Winds of 37 knots have been reported 120 miles south of the centre.

It is forecast to intensify and to move slowly west north-west for the next 24 hours.

NORWEGIAN
PROPELLER

New York, June 21. The Norwegian liner Stavangerfjord arrived in New York today 54 hours late due to the loss of its starboard propeller on June 12 when it was 425 miles outside of Stavanger.

Capt Odd Asplund, master of the ship, said that as soon as he knew what had happened, he announced it to the passengers over the public address system and the 348 passengers took the news gracefully, with no panic.

DELAY

"There were a few disappointments," he added, "because of the unavoidable delay in getting to New York and the inevitable missing of connections with planes and trains."

But passengers joked there was no problem, because the Stavangerfjord crew holds the international lifeboat racing title, and at a pinch could have rowed the passengers ashore.

Asplund was asked how the propeller could have been lost and he said he had no idea how such a mishap could occur.

Macao, June 22. Five men and a woman reached Praia Grande Bay here and landed safely after being chased by a Chinese patrol boat on the night of June 19.

They came all the way from Shekki, down the Pearl River in a fishing junk.

At the entrance of Macao Harbour a Communist patrol boat spotted them and gave chase.

Shallow water inside the Bay prevented the gunboat going any further.—UPI.

The ship carries two reserve propellers with it and tomorrow the Stavangerfjord will go to Todd Shipyards in Brooklyn for drydock and replacement of the propeller.—UPI.

IS MARTIN
DEAD?

London, June 21. Hugh Trevor-Roper, the leading British authority on the history of the lost World War, said today that there was no proof that Martin Bormann, the right-hand man of Adolf Hitler, had died in 1945.

Trevor-Roper, who is Professor of Modern History at Oxford University, was commenting on a statement made in Moscow today by Soviet Marshal Vassili Chukov to the effect that Bormann had died during the last days of the Third Reich. In May 1945.

NOT PROVED

Trevor-Roper said that Bormann's death had never been proved. He said that he himself had been told the same thing, but the statement had not been conclusively proved.

Trevor-Roper corroborated Marshal Chukov's statement that Nazi propaganda chief Joseph Goebbels had asked for the armistice.—UPI.

GUILTY OF CARELESS DRIVING

Police Superintendent gets a $250 fine

J. J. E. Morris, a Superintendent of the Hongkong Police Force, was fined $250 with the alternative of seven days' imprisonment for careless driving by Mr I. T. Morris at Causeway Bay Magistracy this morning.

Morris pleaded guilty. Inspector M. R. Atkinson, prosecuting, said that on the afternoon of May 25, Morris was the driver of a car which was proceeding up Stubbs-road towards the Peak.

DECISION

A Czech spokesman said Nacvalac would leave for Prague at 1400 GMT today from Idlewild Airport on an Air France flight.

Czech sources had said earlier that they believed their government would comply with the State Department's decision that Nacvalac must go.—UPI.

Near centre

Near Rosary Path there was a very sharp left hand blind bend. Morris started to negotiate this bend and went slightly over the centre of the road.

At the time, there was a goods vehicle coming from the opposite direction and also inspector Atkinson said the goods vehicle was on its side of the road but near the centre.

As a result, the two vehicles collided. A private car following the goods vehicle crashed into the rear part of the goods vehicle.

Morris, in mitigation, said that he had nothing to say except he misjudged the corner slightly.

In passing sentence, the Magistrate said that Morris had had good sense to plead guilty to the summons, and so avoided what might easily have been a lengthy investigation. The Court noted with satisfaction, and to his credit, that he had, with complete candour, admitted the offence alleged against him.

Mr Morris added that although he was a respected member of the Police Force in this Colony, he must nevertheless be dealt with in the same way as any other people who appeared in court.

London, June 21. A 30-year-old bank employee, Robert Platten, today crossed the English Channel in six hours and 20 minutes on an old copper bed.

Lying comfortably on his bed, mounted on a catamaran powered by an outboard motor, Platten set out from St Margaret's Bay near Dover and landed near Calais on the north French coast.

He had hoped to make the crossing in six hours.

Platten, who claims people are losing their spirit of adventure, plans to make his next Channel crossing on a coffin.—UPI.

CANADIAN DOLLAR STEADIES AT $5.51 IN HONGKONG

After wild fluctuation in Hongkong in which the Canadian dollar plunged from $5.70 on Tuesday to $4.50 on the free market yesterday, the buyers rate this morning crept up to steady at $5.51—a drop of approximately 3½ per cent.

This morning's rate was fixed by the Hongkong Exchange Banks Association.

"It is based on the London market where Sterling climbed from Can.$2.78 to Can.$2.88 yesterday," said Mr. O. W. Reynolds, Chairman of the Association.

Referring to the slight rise in the prices of gold and U.S. dollar on local market, Mr. Kan said he believed that was due to the inflow of capital from unsuccessful applications for Jardine's shares than to the devaluation report.

Hongkong exporters would get less Hongkong dollars for goods shipped to Canada."

Although Hongkong exporters might adjust their prices to offset the effect, he believed the tendency would be to deter the flow of goods from Hongkong to Canada.

In contrast, Canadian exports to Hongkong would benefit from the devaluation.

EXPLOSION IN LIGHTHOUSE: ONE MISSING

Cleveland, June 21. Three cold and hungry men trapped on a lonely lighthouse rock in Lake Superior for three days by an explosion were rescued today. A fourth man was reported missing.

The explosion at the Standard Rock Lighthouse on Sunday night destroyed all their food, except two tins of beans. All clothing was destroyed except the summer work uniforms the Coast Guardsmen were wearing.

MAKESHIFT

The men pitched a makeshift camp on the piers because deadly fumes from smouldering coal made it impossible for them to take shelter in the wrecked lighthouse.

The men were rescued by a Coast Guard cutter which went out to search for the men had been out of radio contact with their headquarters.

The cutter Woodrush radioed that it found the 69-year-old

METAL MARKET REVIEW

London, June 21.

Tin was again firmer in this afternoon's dealings.

Copper came back into the limelight on the London metal exchange today with cash finishing 5½ points higher on the day.

Lead and zinc were steady but quiet today.

In New York, copper futures today closed 29 to 37 points higher with sales of 350 contracts.

Advances reflected covering by some of the recent short sellers plus a trade demand prompted by rains at London and renewed concern over the mine labour situation in Chile. New political uncertainties in Africa also played a role in shaping market sentiment.—UPL

Many nations vie for Malayan trade

By Gregory Wong

Kuala Lumpur, (By Air Mail). The Malayan peninsula has become the land of "soft talk and big sell" as representatives of various countries are vying to sell their products here.

Since the beginning of the year, businessmen from five countries have visited Malaya in high-powered trade teams to improve their sales in the territory.

First came the Japanese with a "portable" million-dollar trade fair, then the big-name British team. This was followed by the semi-official American trade mission and then another "portable" half-million-dollar trade fair from India.

Now the Australians are here with their $3.5 million floating plant.

One thing common with all these missions were that they were here with one thought in mind, the "hard sell." Business is a cut-throat affair and these tycoons knew it and there were no qualms at taking bites at one another's traditional markets.

The Japanese were here to consolidate their hold in various fields—some of which had been taken from the British. The Britons came seeking a remedy for their declining market in Malaya, while the Indians hoped to expand their small share of the market. The Americans were snapping up the opportunity created by convertibility and freedom from trade restrictions. The Australians are here to boost the image of Australia as an exporting industrial nation.

$1 MILLION

Although Malaya, including Singapore imported nearly as much from Australia last year as it exported to Australia ($170 million against $188 million), it nevertheless trade slip of industrial and secondary industry products to really put Australia on the map for Malayan business as an exporting industrial country.

So far the floating business men have transacted $1 million worth of orders, $4 million of which was placed by firms in Singapore and the rest from the Federation.

Now the tycoons from "downunder" hope for a bigger boost.

Inquiries had also been received for a wide range of Australian-manufactured goods and capital equipment, including pipes and tubes, heavy machinery, electrical switchgear and cables, structural building materials and steel.

This accent on heavy machinery is in line with the Federation's $5,000 million five-year development plan and Singapore's $571 million four-year plan, both of which rely heavily on industrial expansion.

Not losing the opportunity, some of the members of the Australian mission are also investigating the possibility of joint manufacturing ventures with Malayan and Singapore interests.

One such venture envisaged is a $2 million plant for making plastics in Malaya.

Other joint ventures under investigation include factories making chemicals and certain types of paints and other things which would be processed in Australia but given finishing touches in Malaya.

It is also predicted that there would be a sharp rise in Malayan timber exports to Australia.

Exports of various goods had increased by about 10 per cent from the Federation to Australia and 17 per cent from Australia to the Federation since the trade agreement between the two countries was signed in 1958.

Now the tycoons from "downunder" hope for a bigger boost.

"When we came here we installed a five-ton crane. In our new shop we have put in a 16-ton crane. One day I suppose we shall need a 50 tonner."

To pay for the latest round of expansion a new issue of shares is on the way. Terms will be out soon. At a guess I would say the cash will be for a year or £1,000,000.

He plans for the future. Mr Edwards told me, "will be to about double our present production capacity."

"In the beginning," he recalled, "we made small items of plant you could pick up and carry about by hand."

"But High Vacuum equipment has become a large industrial tool that is getting bigger all the time."

"All the knowledge we have acquired might then be pulled in one direction. Our aim is to provide a service for everybody."

I think his fears are groundless. Large blocks of shares are held by big city investors.

And from what I heard they will not be easily tempted to sell.—London Express Service.

This ex-teacher's built a multi-million pound business on vacuums

(Fortunes can be founded on anything—and nothing. Alexander Thomson meets a man who has built a multi-million pound business on vacuums.)

By Alexander Thomson

London, June 21.

Mr Frederick Edwards, bearded and slightly built, once taught science in a Clerkenwell polytechnic. But instead of staying on to become a 'Mr Chips' he gave up teaching 40 years ago to start in business.

CANADIAN MOVE HELPS LONDON STOCKS

London, June 21. The Stock Exchange continued to improve today under the influence of moderate and selective buying.

Now at 72 and a grandfather, he is head of Edwards' High Vacuum Ltd which has a stock exchange value of more than £6,000,000 and a fine modern factory.

Its shares have been one of the winners of the stock market since they were first offered to investors seven years ago.

They have climbed to the equivalent of eight times their starting price and now give a quarterly yield of less than two per cent.

"Will your growth in the next seven years be as big as in the last seven?" I asked Mr Edwards.

Stroking his trim grey beard as we paced slowly round his place he told me: "Yes, I think it will."

"The scale of application for high vacuum processes gets larger and larger every year."

"There is now hardly an industry that does not use our vacuum plants in some way or another."

They play a part he explained in everything from the manufacture of imitation jewellery and food preparation to handling of special metals for nuclear and electronic work.

FOOD DRYING

His keen eyes twinkled eagerly as he added: "And now there is the development of accelerated food drying. That is going to become a big thing one day."

This is a process for drying food for storing to one-tenth its normal weight and bulk. Add a little water and it is back to normal again."

But that is looking ahead. To any casual visitor it is clear that Edwards' High Vacuum is bursting at the seams already.

'All those who try war will share Hitler's fate' MORE WARNINGS FROM MR K

Little Florence talks about outer space!

New Jersey, June 21.

Florence Jacobs, 2½ years old, returned to normal routine after astonishing newspaper and television reporters yesterday by her prodigious memory and interest in such things as outer space.

Her mother, Mrs Jerome Jacobs, halted further interviews because the brown-eyed, curly-haired child, who now reads sixth and seventh-grade books, had become bored with it all and had difficulty keeping awake.

Youngest library member

The newspaper hordes descended upon the Jacobs home after the public library here announced it had issued a membership card to the child, the youngest patron in the library's history.

It was in recognition of her thirst for reading matter.

Able to recite the alphabet since she was 11 months old, Florence, according to her parents, is sometimes difficult to get along with because she is openly scornful of anybody who fails to use correctly the words she knows.

Outer space

Asked by reporters, "What dangers will man face in outer space?" The child recited from memory from a child's book: "Cosmic rays, micrometeorites, ultra violet rays and infra red emissions."

This prompted a query as to what she wants to be when she grows up.

"A mother," little Flo replied promptly.—UPI.

To stand trial for murder of child

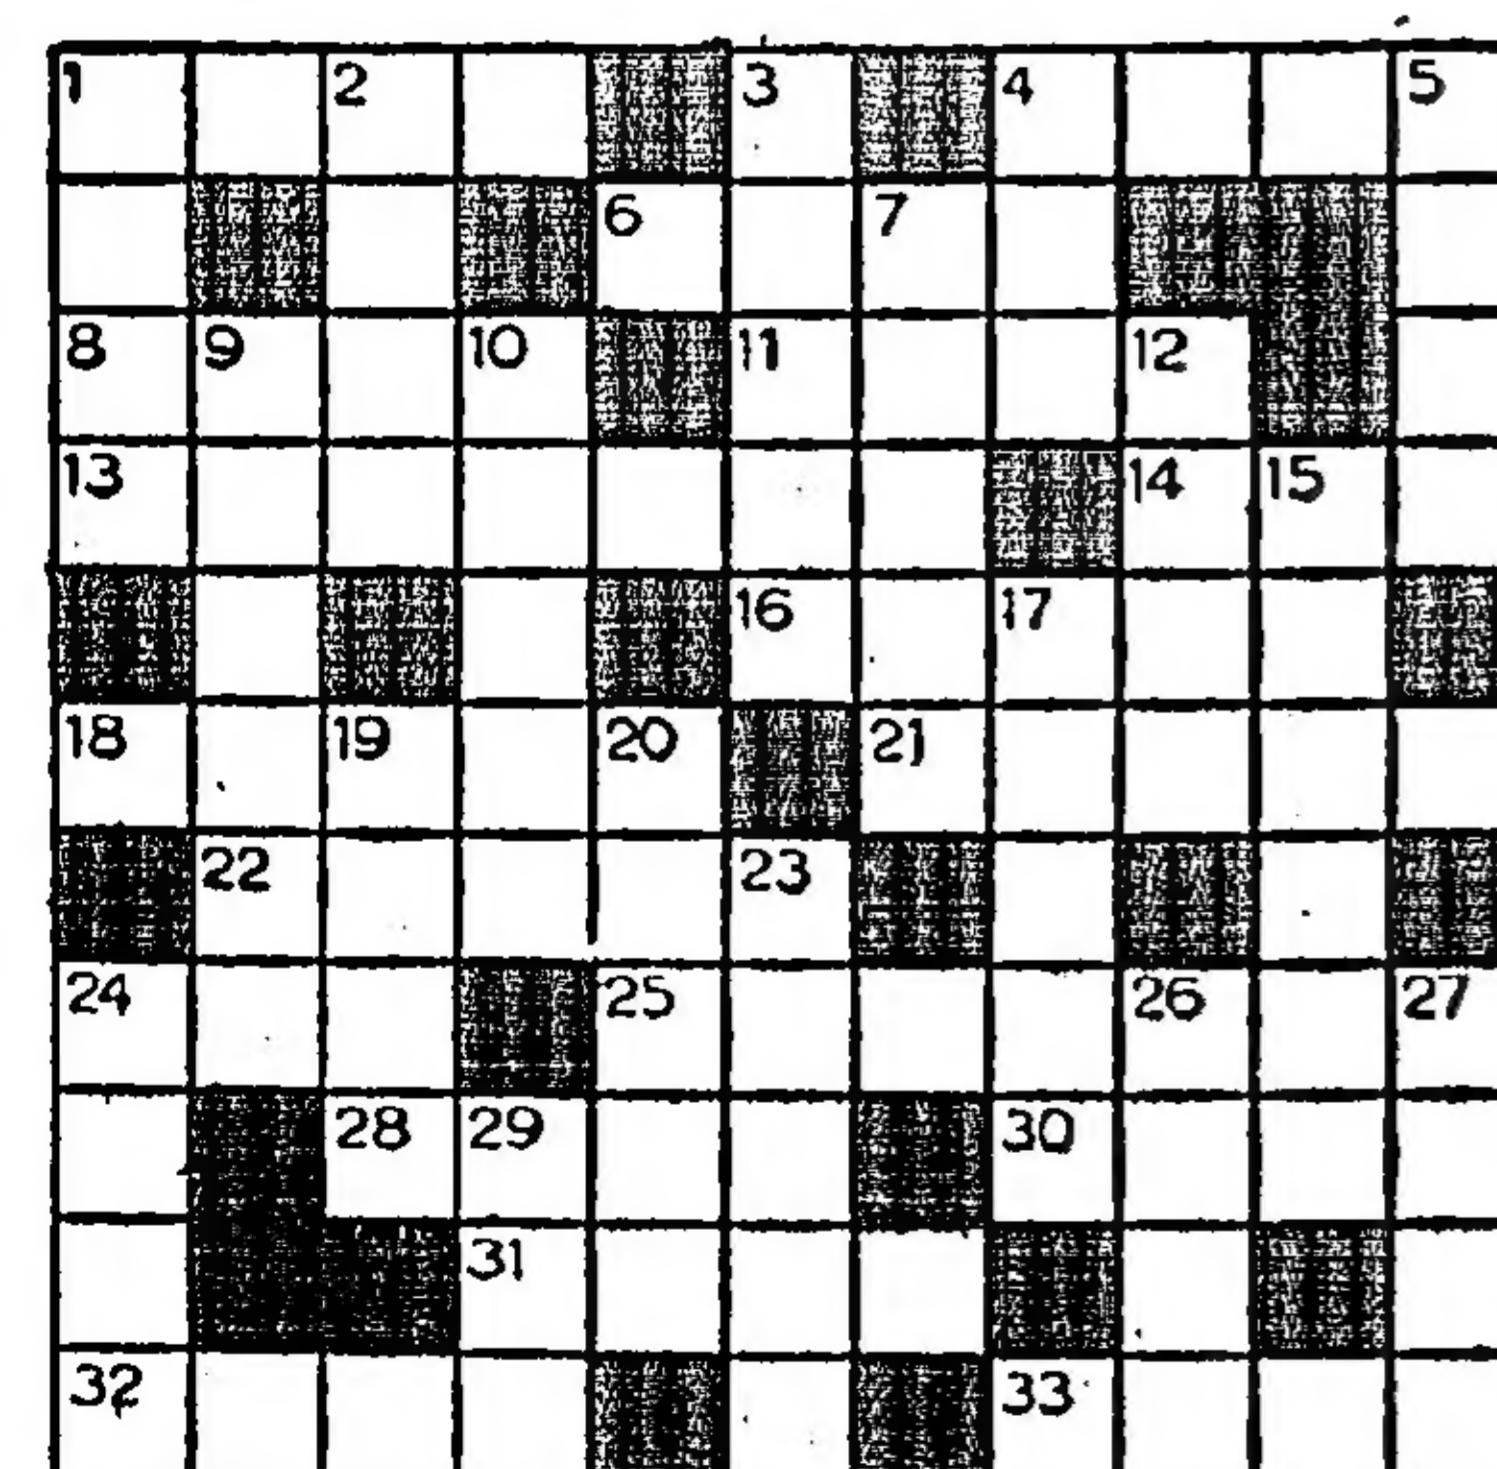

Alan Victor Wills, 33-year-old hotel porter, was sent for trial here today accused of the murder of six-year-old Amanda Graham.

Amanda was missed from her home here on May 24, and found dead the following day. The prosecution said she had been found raped and murdered, in a room occupied by Wills in the hotel where he worked.

Wills was alleged to have told police: "It points to me having done it. I want to pay for it."

He was also alleged to have said: "I am ashamed of everything. I cannot remember having done it."—Reuters.

A peace treaty with East Germany soon

Moscow, June 21.
Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev said here today: "Jointly with other peace-loving states we will sign a peace treaty with the German Democratic Republic (East Germany) at the end of this year," Tass news agency reported.

Mr Khrushchev, speaking on the 20th anniversary of the German attack on the Soviet Union, said: "The ruling quarters of the Western powers even now oppose the conclusion of a German peace treaty, and would like to make the German issue a touchstone for a test of strength," Tass said.

No need

Mr Khrushchev said: "As soon as the United States resumes its nuclear tests we will resume them too. We do not however, need such experiments to improve our atomic bombs."

Mr Khrushchev warned West German Chancellor Mr Konrad Adenauer, and others who, he said, "in response to the Soviet Union's peaceful proposals call to 'stand firm' and even threaten 'to give rebuff,' that things had changed in the past 20 years."

Mr Khrushchev said: "Now not only the German revolutionaries, but all those who would like to support them in a new adventure against us, would share Hitler's fate."

Mr Khrushchev said the Soviet Union wanted to sign a peace treaty with Germany and with its foreign allies.

"We suggest that such a peace treaty should be concluded with Germany which would not infringe the rights and interests of any of the sides, would not give one state an advantage over another."

Blinded

He said that "useful lessons" could be derived from World War Two. He said when Hitler and the German fascists were striving to seize power, "the Soviet Union was the only state which tirelessly urged the fighting of fascism, preventing it from unleashing another world war."

Mr Khrushchev said the ruling circles of the "bourgeois states, blinded by their hatred for our socialist country and fearing the world revolutionary movement, did not accept any of the Soviet government's proposals although their advisability was evident to all."

He said the whole pre-history of World War Two was "a disgraceful chapter in the policy of the so-called Western democracies," adding that the ruling quarters in Britain, France, Poland and other states had not hesitated to betray the national interests of their peoples."

He said the Soviet government had seen through the perfidy of the "imperialist circles," which "connived with the aggressor, wanted to crush the Soviet Union by means of Hitler's war machine."

Mr Khrushchev added that the "aggressive imperialist circles" still held such ideas but now there was no might which could be set against that of the Soviet Union.

He accused the "so-called" Western democracies of pursuing a "double-faced policy" on the eve of the Second World War, and the Soviet government grew convinced that they did not want to join forces with the USSR against the fascist countries.

Then the Soviet government had no other recourse but to start negotiations with Hitler, while realising that it was striking a deal with the devil incarnate.

He said the imperialist powers reacted to the Soviets' call to compete in material and spiritual values by increasing their military expenditures and their armed forces.

He said: "This might make it imperative for the Soviet Union also to increase appropriations for armaments in order to strengthen and improve our defences and, if need be, also to increase the numerical strength of the armed forces in order to safeguard peace and peaceful co-existence, relying on our might."—AFP.

Soundness

Later, Mr Khrushchev added, events proved the short-sightedness of the Western policy and the soundness of the Soviet position.

He charged that Western governments apparently profited little from the lessons of the past, pointing to "war criminals" in top commanding posts in Nato.

Mr Khrushchev called on the West German leaders to be "reasonable."

The Soviet people did not want war, and this was why the Soviet Union was trying to eliminate the causes for its outbreak, he said.

He said that the US, Britain and France still maintained

VEERS OFF THE RUNWAY KLM PLANE IN NEAR DISASTER

New York, June 21.
A KLM Royal Dutch Air Lines DC-8, carrying 67 passengers and a crew of 12 from Amsterdam, veered off the runway as it landed at Idlewild Airport on Wednesday evening, coming to a halt in deep sand about 50 feet from the sea.

No one was reported injured aboard the plane, according to the Port of New York Authority.

The jet landed in a light rain at 2151 GMT and veered off the left about 150 feet from the runway.

NOTIFIED

If the plane had gone about 50 feet further to the side it would have slipped into Jamaica Bay.

Prior to landing the aircraft had notified the control tower that it had developed trouble with its hydraulic system. The system controls the hydraulic brake action on the plane.

Emergency equipment was standing by as the plane landed. The equipment, however, was not needed. The nose wheel of the plane did not buckle, police said.

The passengers were taken from the plane in two buses and brought to the International arrival building.—AP.

Peace

Mr Khrushchev said the Soviet Union, with its tremendous economic and military might, would not use its forces for aggressive ends, but would direct all its efforts to safeguarding peace.

He said nobody could stand aloof from the common struggle for peace if they wanted to prevent the "terrible conflagration of a most devastating war" from breaking out.

He said the peoples "must realise that they alone can—and must—force their governments to abandon the dangerous course directed towards fanning up war passions and fostering the arms race," and must "render harmless the men who conduct the policy of preparing war."

He said that at a time when the Soviet Union had liquidated its military bases abroad and materially reduced its armed forces more than once, the US had increased its military appropriations by almost $2,500,000,000 as compared with the previous year.

Mr Khrushchev said that West German Chancellor Adenauer was demanding nuclear weapons for the Bundeswehr "for revanchist adventures against the USSR and other states."

Soberly

Such measures by the Western powers, he said, were designed to aggravate relations between states. He urged the socialist countries to "soberly assess the situation, to display vigilance so that the enemies of socialism, the aggressive militaristic circles, should not catch us unawares."

He said the imperialist powers reacted to the Soviets' call to compete in material and spiritual values by increasing their military expenditures and their armed forces.

He said: "This might make it imperative for the Soviet Union also to increase appropriations for armaments in order to strengthen and improve our defences and, if need be, also to increase the numerical strength of the armed forces in order to safeguard peace and peaceful co-existence, relying on our might."—AFP.

BORDER CLASH

Damascus, June 21.
A usually reliable source said here today that one Iraqi was killed and three others wounded in a 15 minute tribal clash on the UAR-Syrian frontier on Tuesday.

The clash was between Jan "Velvet" Brueghel, Dutch artist known as "Velvet" to distinguish him from other members of his family who were also painters.—China Mail Special.

CANADIAN $ CONFUSION Rates alter from sale to sale

Montreal, June 21.
Exchange rates were thrown into confusion on Wednesday following the announcement that the Canadian dollar is to be pushed below parity with the U.S. dollar.

A banking source said reached a point where the Royal Bank of Canada advised its offices not to make any currency sales without first consulting the head office here.

Normally the head office supplies branches with a list of exchange rates which stands unchanged throughout the day.

But on Wednesday, the Canadian dollar value changed almost from sale to sale.

The dollar was trading at a discount of two to four per cent in Montreal in early transactions. At noon it was selling for 97½ cents U.S.

The banking official said the confusion will likely exist until the government or the Bank of Canada gives some indication of what point they wish to have the dollar stabilised.—AP.

46 English seamen fined in Sydney

Sydney, June 21.
Forty-six young English seamen from the "Orion," "Port Lincoln" and "Alairic" were each fined £13 in Sydney Central Court today.

All pleaded guilty to charges of offensive behaviour, indecent behaviour, and having used indecent language.

Two, who also pleaded guilty to having resisted arrest, were fined an extra £2 each.

The arrests, made between 10 pm and midnight last night, followed an attack it two policemen in a Pyrmont cafe on Saturday night.—China Mail Special.

NEEDS OUTLINED

Bogota, June 21.
Ambassador Adolfo Stevenson today received an outline from top officials on Colombia's need for some $600 million from the U.S. and prepared to return home tomorrow with requests for an estimated total of $3 billion in aid for all of South America.—UPI.

Rudolph Nureyev

Nureyev said still bound by contract

London, June 21.
The Soviet star ballerina, Rudolph Nureyev, who last Sunday sought political asylum in France, is still bound by his contract, it was said here tonight by the impresario of the Korov Company, Victor Rocharuer.

Under this contract, Nureyev was bound to dance with the Korov Company in London on June 23 in "The Sleeping Beauty."

Rocharuer said that the action of the International Ballet of the late Marquis de Cuevas and his representative, Claude Girard in inviting Nureyev to dance in Paris on the same night was unethical, inconsiderate and irresponsible, particularly as this visit to London of the Lenigrad Ballet forms part of the Anglo-Soviet cultural agreement.

HIGH FEE

"I don't say he would receive that much in Britain, but by Soviet standards he would receive a very high fee."

"I can make no comment on any political reasons he might have for leaving the Soviet Union but, those apart, he is being rather short-sighted in his action."

"As a Russian star dancer, he receives a high salary and under his long-term contract is even looked after in his retirement."

"I don't blame him, I blame the French company for inviting him to dance there. I feel he has been taken advantage of."

A SLAP

"This is a slap in the face, an insult to us. There is no political reason why Nureyev should not dance in Britain as well as in France. When his contract is up, he would be free to choose to dance where he wished."

Nureyev fled from Soviet security officers when he was about to board a London-bound aircraft from Paris, when he was informed that he could not go to London, but had to return at once to the Soviet Union.—AFP.

First agreement in Laos talks reached

Zurich, June 21.
Deputies of the left, right and neutralist Laotian Princes have reached agreement here on integration of the opposing forces in Laos, a transition period under the present regime and the policies of a coalition government, it was announced today.

They then got down to discussing the composition of such a government. Tomorrow the princes themselves will meet—extending their "summit" by a day—to consider the whole picture.

General Phoumi Nosavan, right-wing Defence Minister, said agreement had not yet been reached on left and neutralist demands that the new government should renounce the protection of Sihanouk.

Asked whether he thought an overall agreement was near, he replied: "That is a surprise which we will keep for you until tomorrow."

The left-wing Pathet Lao spokesman Mr Phoumi Vongtij, said there had been "a certain rapprochement" of disputed issues.

At the Laos conference in Geneva, Canada called on Britain and Russia to work out, with the International Control Commission, practical details for supplying the Commission with helicopters, light aircraft and other equipment.

The French offer included the personnel to operate this and other equipment.

Mr Green said: "Equipment in amounts adequate to the Commission's immediate needs ever it required for its duties and the Commission must have full control over such equipment.

He agreed that he and his Soviet co-chairman should get together to consider the matter, along with the Geneva representatives of the three countries in the commission.—Reuter.

In seven weeks of operation the Commission had been unable to make a single on-site investigation of any alleged violations of the ceasefire.

Failure of the Laotian incident at Phnom Penh, he declared.

"I cannot believe it is the intention of the conference to reduce the Commission, which is its own agent, to a position of impotence and indeed of exposure to ridicule."

Support

The Polish delegate, Mr Marian Naszowski, said "exaggerated importance" was being attached to the question of transport for the Commission. In the past transport was supplied by the parties to the 1954 Geneva Agreement on Laos.

Menzies under attack for 'confidence' talk over radio, television

Prime Minister R. G. Menzies came in for some sharp criticism last week following his nation-wide talk on the current economic recession.

• BY THE WAY

by Beachcomber

A CORRESPONDENT who has evidently not read my handbook on bee-keeping, asks me how to start keeping bees. I can only reply in the words of Mr. P. G. Woodhouse: "Advertise for a second-hand queen."

Meanwhile I can conscientiously recommend Buzzoff's "The Mongolian Bee." (Bubble and Squeak, 48s. 7d. net. Translated by Lady Ermitude.) It has a half-hearted introduction by Baldur von Stung of Braunkau University.

The new alloy

DR STRABISMUS (Whom God Preserves) of Utrecht reports that when the new alloy was used in a condensation experiment, the air filled with dust and two revolving furnace furnaces disintegrated, leaving the leach-plungers bent at an angle of 37 degrees.

From this he concludes that when the pressure is on the Naunton gauges exceeds 32 c.f. But 64/29, gas-bubbles form in the contralux-fexor. They were supported by the Sydney Morning Herald which described conditions as "far from happy." The newspaper called for immediate action to relieve the pressure of the recession. The Daily Telegraph gave Mr. Menzies rousing support and scuttled scores on the "meritocrats who have been trying to undermine the country's self-confidence." Cabinet meetings in Canberra early this week and the Premiers' Conference later in the week may give a pointer to future policy, but if any easing of restrictions is forthcoming observers do not expect more than minimum correctives.

Meanwhile "Iron" Balzarotti, the challenger, showed a fine turn of speed on the Abertanbara track, lapping at 173 inches an hour, and flashing past a small which was fleeing from a thrush.

"THIS haddock must have come out of the Ark." A ghastly silence descended on Mrs. McGurk's breakfast table. The vegetarian whom call the herbaceous boaster gave a sickly smile. Mrs. Hobart blushed to the coloured roots of her hair.

The new boaster, who had uttered the words, prodded his helping, or, rather, portion, with his fork, and then cast it aside in an ill-fitting glove. Mrs. McGurk, who had been self-possessed, said: "Mr. Spole, if this fails to attain to your standard of perfection, pray before you give full rein to your taste for vulgar and audible meditation, that there are ladies present?" A murmur of approbation greeted this just reprimand. Mr. Spole went on, albeit sulkily, with the alleged haddock.

R Rhubarb's corner

D.L. writes: I returned very sunburned from an Easter holiday. A short-sighted gentleman in a tea-shop seized my hand, and said, "I think they've given you my brown broad." What should I have done?

D.R. says: You should have buttered your hand, and laughingly explained his mistake to him.

Cosmetic corner

In the most unlikely places One is always meeting Girls with greasy faces— But not from rating. London Express Service.

His talk over radio and television came at a time of mounting unemployment, a falling-off in home construction, decline in hire purchase business and retail sales as well as a credit squeeze that is causing difficulties in wide sector of the business community — a situation which the Bank of New South Wales described as "disquieting."

Mr. Menzies had told the nation: "Don't let people persuade you that you're living in a danger of a depression. We won't have a depression unless the people of Australia lose faith in themselves." He went on to appeal to Australians to do their spending in a normal way "confident in the country's unlimited future." He ended by predicting "another ten years of the most remarkable national growth" and told listeners and viewers that overseas investment which was a record in the year 1959-60, would be larger this year. "In the eyes of the rest of the world, our credit has never stood higher."

One industrial leader said however: "We all have confidence in the long term outcome but it does not make the present conditions any more palatable nor does it make the Government's refusal to recognise these conditions excusable." Other industrial leaders criticised the Government's "crippling restrictive policies." They were supported by the Sydney Morning Herald which described conditions as "far from happy." The newspaper called for immediate action to relieve the pressure of the recession.

The Daily Telegraph gave Mr. Menzies rousing support and scuttled scores on the "meritocrats who have been trying to undermine the country's self-confidence." Cabinet meetings in Canberra early this week and the Premiers' Conference later in the week may give a pointer to future policy, but if any easing of restrictions is forthcoming observers do not expect more than minimum correctives.

Champion boomerang thrower Frank Donnellan recently suggested to a Sydney group planning a carnival in Hongkong that they might take a few boomerangs with them and give demonstrations as sales promotion stunt.

The group made inquiries about this in Hongkong but back came the disheartening reply from their agents: "It is with regret that we have to inform you that since the boomerang is considered by the Hongkong Police as a missile weapon, any sale or demonstration is thus prohibited."

An old grumble in Sydney is that shops close too early to allow people working in the city to make their purchases before going home at night. Various proposals have been put up to keep them open longer.

The idea won support recently from the State Premier, Dr. Hamada's was the only PhD degree conferred.

Mr. R. J. Heffron. But when the Premier made known his views it started a storm in the State Labour Party.

The attack on the Premier was spearheaded by Alderman E. C. O'Dea, former Lord Mayor of Sydney, who is secretary of the Shop Assistants' Union, who minded no words in condemning the plan. He went so far as to say that Mr. Heffron was too old for the job.

This weekend, Mr. Heffron changed his mind, announced publicly to a State ALP conference that there was to be no change in shopping hours after all.

Mr. Heffron had told the nation: "It sounded like the old Bob Heffron at his best—and I mean that over a period of years." Well, the only consolation for the shoppers is that Messrs. Heffron and O'Dea are chums again.

There are two Australian Chinese living in Sydney who are often confused—not surprisingly since they are both named Dr Hing—but they are not related.

One is Dr Sydney Hing. The other is Dr Norman Sidney Hing. Both went to Sydney University. Each has a younger brother who is a dentist, each a sister named Eileen.

Dr Norman was a top student at Sydney University. Dr Sydney gained a top pass in his diploma exam at Dublin against candidates from many nations.

None of this confusion would have arisen if their forbears had anglicised their proper surnames, their first name in Chinese. Today the two Dr Hings would have been Dr Sydney Gee and Dr Norman Sidney Lum.

The Sydney film festival which opened last week has won complete recognition as an international festival for the first time this year.

This year's festival was the eighth of its series and was opened by the Vice Chancellor of Sydney University Professor S. H. Robert.

A special Australian representative at the festival was Captain Frank Hurley who spoke on his experiences with the 1914 Shackleton expedition before the showing of his documentary of the ill-fated expedition.

The Hongkong documentary "This is Hongkong" which won an award in Asian film festival, is scheduled to be shown in this festival to interested visitors only.

Norman Manley, the Prime Minister of Jamaica, has a rugged, fighting look about him (he has been, in fact, president of the British Boxing Board of Control).

He has a brilliant mind and is a quiet, persuasive speaker. As a Q.C. he could have made a fortune, but he has not been more interested in righting his country's wrongs.

He needs all this ruggedness, all this brilliance for the tasks he is now tackling in London. One of them is to look after Jamaica's interests in the constitutional talks on the West Indies Federation. He has threatened to keep Jamaica out unless she has a special place.

His other task is to ease tension caused in Britain by West Indian immigration.

Jamaica is a ravishingly beautiful island with secluded corners ideally suited to offer playgrounds for the rich. But the same Jamaica is desperately poverty-stricken, condemned to a few crops, cursed by huge unemployment and an uncontrollable birth-rate.

Tackling these problems is a long, long task. Fortunately for his people, Dr. Manley looks as though he has plenty of energy yet.

Roosevelt
 Zanders
 big trip

New York, June 21. Roosevelt Zanders, known as New York's "celebrity chauffeur," will leave on Sunday for Ghana as an official guest of president Kwame Nkrumah.

He will also come to Hongkong. Carrying letters from the US State Department, he will take in 12 other nations during a 7-week tour and will meet with several Asian and African leaders.

Zanders has met many of them before in the course of running an unusual New York Limousine service. The service, which costs about 150 dollars a day, provides visitors not only with transportation but with anything else they might need, including even baby-sitting.

A 46-year-old Negro and native of Youngstown, Ohio, Zanders started the service here in 1940 with one limousine bought with a bank loan. He now has nine limousines and six employees and estimates his gross yearly income at 150,000 dollars.

The invitation to Ghana came about as a result of Nkrumah's recent trip to America. Zanders chauffeured him around, giving the American leader "personalised service" and even keeping the King of Jordan waiting while he helped Nkrumah get ready for his departure.

Shortly thereafter, Zanders received an invitation to attend Ghana's First Anniversary celebration as a guest of Nkrumah.

OWN EXPENSE

In addition, and at his own expense, Zanders plans to visit England, Nigeria, Legon, Ghana, the Cameroons, Liberia, Kenya, India, Hongkong, Singapore, Japan and the Philippines.

Zanders feels more American Negroes should travel, especially to the new African countries, saying:

"It'll give the American Negro a broader view, and it'll show the Africans that Negroes in this country are not oppressed by our government and are free to come and go as they choose."

Constitutional proposals
 approved

Salisbury, June 21. The South Rhodesian Parliament today approved the constitutional proposals for the territory contained in the recently-published White Paper.

The nine members of the right-wing Dominion Party were the only opponents of the proposals.

SAFEGUARDS

Under the White Paper proposals, Britain will abandon reserve powers giving her the right to legislate for Southern Rhodesia. Alternative safeguards are to be written into the constitution, and the election of at least one African to every four people of other races in the new legislature is virtually assured.

The National Democratic Party, the territory's African nationalist organisation, which has rejected proposals, will boycott the referendum to be held on July 28 and instead hold a referendum of its own.—Reuters.

Nairobi, June 21. European hospitals here will have to begin closing down wards in six months if replacements are not found for European nurses who are resigning, a hospital official said.

Mr C. V. Bradbridge, Medical Director of the European Hospital Association, which runs two hospitals and a nursing home—said they were understaffed but were "just managing to keep going."

He added: "If the situation does not change in the next six months we will have to start closing down wards and have a waiting list for patients."

Fifty-four nurses are reported to be due to quit European hospitals here within the next six months and only nine replacements are so far coming out from Britain.—China Mail Special.

Sale of late
 comedian's
 belongings

London, June 21. Crowds of fans of comedian George Formby who died in March poured into the seaside town of Lytham, St. Annes, Lancashire, yesterday for the sale of his home and its contents.

Many sought small personal items as souvenirs of the popular Lancashire comedian.

Loudspeakers were erected throughout the house—Brydene named after the comedian's wife—Brydene who died in December.

FIRST PERSON

More than 8,000 people visited Brydene during the three days of viewing which ended yesterday Monday. The sale which began yesterday will go on for three days.

The first person there for the sale was Mrs Josephine Eccleston of Blackpool who paid four pence to see George's first film in the 1920's. She was interested in buying some personal items for sentimental reasons.—China Mail Special.

Only a small
 problem in UK

London, June 21. Britain has few worries over drug addiction, an official investigation has reported. The incidence of drug addiction is very small and there is no reason to fear a significant increase, according to the report of an inter-departmental committee on drug addiction.

The committee, appointed by the British Government to study the problem, said addiction should be regarded as an expression of mental disorder rather than criminality. But it recommended against compulsory treatment or registration of addicts.—UPI.

MAIDEN SPEECH

LORD MONTGOMERY
 MAKES PEERS
 STRAIN THEIR EARS

London, June 21. Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, of Alamein, in a breezy maiden speech in the House of Lords, made many staid peers sit up and strain their ears last night by talking about a "dog's breakfast" and the "cat's whiskers."

He was speaking on a criminal justice bill and calling for the complete overhaul of the organisation of after-care of civilian prisoners in Britain.

In his first parliamentary speech since he entered the House of Lords 15 years ago, he said the present organisation was "a complete dog's breakfast," and went on:

"Some of you may not know what that means—you will not find it in the dictionary. But it is the exact opposite of the cat's whiskers."

COUNTER ATTACK

In a counter attack on politicians, who have often attacked him for making controversial speeches, Lord Montgomery said politicians seldom noted on their own judgment.

Decisions were almost always based on what they were told by their advisers.

"I have a feeling that in this country we are committee-bound," he added.—China Mail Special.

Return to DUNKIRK

I never realised, she said...

GILLIAN CRABB was a baby when the father she had never seen came back from the beaches of Dunkirk 21 years ago. To her, as to a whole generation now, Dunkirk was just a name... until Jethro Crabb left his business in Salisbury for a few days to retrace his long-ago steps to Dunkirk — and took his daughter with him.

by MICHAEL PARKINSON

THE last time he had driven this way it had been in an Army truck, lurching in the darkness over a shell-cratered road.

The barrage which had pounded the wood where his unit had sheltered had lifted to range on the town in front. The town called Dunkirk.

This time he drove on the road to Dunkirk in a smart blue saloon car with his daughter next to him. They drove for about three miles from the wood towards Dunkirk until they came to a field.

He wasn't sure if this was the field. The last time he stopped there was on May 29, 1940, and it was dark.

But it was here, or somewhere near, where they stopped their trucks and were ordered to leave everything behind except the most essential equipment.

And somewhere, in a field not far from Agincourt, he had left a bundle of papers from home, some letters from his wife, a blanket or two, and some ballys.

THE GLARE

Then they had moved in single file across the fields towards the glare which was Dunkirk. "Did you walk for a long time?" asked the daughter.

"It seemed for ever," he said.

" weren't you tired, didn't you get tired when you were running away?" he said.

By now father and daughter had come to the outskirts of Dunkirk where the memorial stands. If you don't worry about why it was built it seems a pleasant place with neat white stone and carefully manicured verges.

They toured the cemetery and the daughter said: "Did you know any of these men?" But he wasn't sure. There were names he remembered, but how many Taylors, Robins, and Joneses were at Dunkirk? Perhaps it was then that she began to realise among the neatly ruled rows of small white crosses. They came on one marked, "Private Potts" and she said, looking at it: "He was only 21."

As old, then, in 1940 when he died, as she was now, young and healthy and enjoying life.

And perhaps it was then that she began to associate herself with what happened 21 years ago, while she was a baby sleeping blissfully at home, never bothered about the daddy she had never seen.

It might have been near the site of the memorial that he entered Dunkirk.

He remembered it well because on this outskirts of the town they passed the French Horse Artillery.

The horses had been weary placid, the men tired and strained.

They were digging their guns in ready to cover the retreat from Dunkirk, preparing to make the last stand. For them there was no escape.

And on the single file of British soldiers plodded through their lines no one said a word. The French watched them with tired, disinterested eyes and no one spoke. What was there to say?

CHASED

"Not many, my dear," he said. "And when I first saw the beaches they looked dreadful."

It was early in the morning, about 4.30 and there were a few men on the water's edge. They were looking out to sea where there were ships, a multitude of ships, all different shapes and sizes — all heading away from the coast.

The ships were chased and harried by bombers and fighters but they steamed on.

The men on the beaches stood by the edge of the sea until the ships had disappeared over the horizon and all you could see were wispy fingerprints of smoke against the grey morning sky.

"What did you do with yourself?" the daughter asked.

"Well," he said, "I took my boots off first of all. My feet were killing me."

"And I sat down by the only anti-aircraft gun there was on the beach. What did I do then? Well, let's see... I think I considered the problems of my survival."

"I sat there without my boots on, nibbling a bar of chocolate wondering how I could get back to Salisbury. I didn't feel like a soldier then. I felt like someone who is stranded somewhere and must rely on his own initiative to get himself home."

He had moved in single file with the army — "on inactive duty" — he became a major at 21; a colonel at 22; a major-general at 23; and a lieutenant-general at 25.

But his most celebrated military exploits were in the United States, where he attended the Army Command and General Staff College in Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1957.

He arrived with his wife, five children, servants, a six-man crew of private detectives, a bank account estimated at £300,000, and a £12,000-a-month allowance.

Tactfully demoting himself to colonel to avoid embarrassing his colleagues, he sold out on the entire top floor of a Kansas City hotel, where he was surrounded with pistols, guns, and tear-gas bombs.

But when Porfirio Rubirosa, his brother-in-law, gave him Zsa Zsa Gabor's telephone number, his wife and children were quickly shipped back to Ciudad Trujillo.

HOLLYWOOD

He took off for Hollywood and installed himself in villa with a butler.

Soon Miss Gabor had a £2,000 chinchilla coat and a £2,000 sports car. And she was not the only star to see the colour of Rafael's money.

To Kim Novak went a £3,000 car, a £1,200 diamond and black pearl ring, and a set of £200 diamond ear-rings.

English actress Joan Collins got a £3,000 diamond bracelet.

Hollywood was even more appreciative when his fabulously yacht Angelina arrived.

With her 60-man crew and 12-piece calypso orchestra, the yacht was ideal for parties. The Angelina also proved that Trujillo was not entirely apathetic. He had her listed as a Dominican Republic warship to save paying harbour and pilot fees.

The new strong man of the Dominican Republic is the only dictator who got his training on the playing fields of Hollywood.

His knowledge of tactics there is impeccable. But he never really caught on to military strategy at Fort Leavenworth.

There he was told he had failed his course — but it could be kept secret.

The deputy commandant told him: "At the graduation parade you will be handed a certificate of attendance, but it will look like a passing-out diploma."

Whatever his qualifications, he is flying high — higher, incidentally, than he ever did in the air force.

Though he has been its commander for years, he never made the grade as pilot.

INSULTING'

"Alternatively, you may leave Fort Leavenworth now. I am

sighted moving slowly towards Dunkirk.

And as the drew nearer the shore it became dark. A thick, stormy blackness which enveloped the whole of the beaches and hid them from the waiting enemy aircraft.

"All day long soldiers were coming on to the beaches. They all seemed weary and helpless.

"And then there were lots of wounded men with bandaged bandages around their heads and I saw them and thanked God that at least I was in one piece.

"They all formed into orderly queues which curled like sleeping snakes on the beaches. I don't know how many. Let's say there were thousands and thousands. The thing that struck me was the horrible silence. All those men and hardly a sound from them.

PATIENT

"They queued up patiently as if they were at home waiting to go into a football match."

"The only time they moved was when the German planes swooped low and scanned the beaches. But the planes didn't seem to be interested in us.

"They concentrated on the town. Our turn would come when the ships came. If ever they came."

"He was sitting in the gun emplacement now, where he had been 21 years ago. A man in a blue duffel coat with silvery hair and by his side a charming, attentive daughter who was listening to a story she had been told many times, but never in such detail and never with the sense of being a part of his story.

"She asked him: "Did you ever wonder what sort of a daughter you had?"

BLACKNESS

"He said: "Of course, I thought about names too. But I had plenty of time to think about many things that day."

"He had waited, mainly considering the way of getting away from these beaches, all through the long, dull day until at about 4.30 pm the first ships were sighted moving slowly towards Dunkirk.

And as the drew nearer the shore it became dark. A thick, stormy blackness which enveloped the whole of the beaches and hid them from the waiting enemy aircraft.

"He put his boots on and stood up. He could hear the aircraft buzzing about above the storm, probing the darkness. And he walked towards one of the long queues of soldiers.

"Three times he got to the water's edge and every time he was one of the first to be turned away from the bobbing little boats which were ferrying the soldiers out to the larger ships.

"He no longer held his rifle above his head. It was trailing in the sea.

"He wondered why on earth he kept hold of it. But somehow he couldn't throw it away. It still seemed symbol of defiance.

"He was wet and dejected. Salisburys seemed further away than ever before. He went back up the beach and sat down for a while and then he decided to walk out into the water to the waiting queues of men.

A SHOUT

"Now his daughter said to him: "Show me where you entered the water." And he walked with her towards the sea, near a spot where a landing craft poked rusty iron through the surface, and said: "Somewhere around here, I think."

"He told her how he walked into the sea not quite knowing what he was going to do. Soon it would be daylight. The ships would be leaving and the German planes, free from the cover of the storm, would be back.

"He walked slowly into the sea until it was waist high, and then chest high and then it was up to his neck and now and again he had mouthfuls of salt sea water.

"And then someone shouted: "Give us a hand, here, mate," and there was a lifeboat in front of him and a man in a chunky blue sweater was leaning over the side asking him to steady the boat while they loaded it with men.

"Cliff" was given his clothes back before the ship docked at Margate, and sent him to a camp within 40 miles of his home. He slipped out of the camp and went home to Salisbury, and for the first time saw his baby daughter.

"When he rejoined his unit he discovered he had been one of the lucky ones. His unit had been badly mauled on the beaches. Many men had died. More were wounded. Some were listed missing, presumed dead. One of these was Private Crabb J. 7589510, R.A.C.

"That's all there is to it really," he said to his daughter as Dunkirk slipped away in the distance.

They gave him his clothes back before the ship docked at Margate, and sent him to a camp within 40 miles of his home. He slipped out of the camp and went home to Salisbury, and for the first time saw his baby daughter.

"When I never realised it was quite as bad as that. I am glad I found out, though. And I'm ever so glad you came home."

On the beach at Dunkirk. For him, memories. For her, curiosity.

And they smiled and turned their backs on Dunkirk and walked forward to where the ship was dipping deep to Dover and home.

THE PLAYBOY DICTATOR

HE GOT HIS TRAINING IN HOLLYWOOD—HANDING OUT FUR COATS AND CARS

by Terence Lancaster

FROM the age of three—when he joined the Dominican Republic Army, with £30 a week in pay and allowances—Rafael Trujillo has been a boy most likely to succeed. And, sure enough, this month 32-year-old Rafael succeeded his slain father as dictator on his homeland.

Certainly, he is used to sudden promotion. After his childhood spell with the army — "on inactive duty" — he became a major at 21; a colonel at 22; a major-general at 23; and a lieutenant-general at 25.

But his most celebrated military exploits were in the United States, where he attended the Army Command and General Staff College in Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1957.

But when Porfirio Rubirosa, his brother-in-law, gave him Zsa Zsa Gabor's telephone number, his wife and children were quickly shipped back to Ciudad Trujillo.

"Do Johnny live here?" he asked of the man who came to open the door.

Trujillo understood very well.

But publicly ended his love affair with America. For while he was flying it up in Hollywood, the U.S. Congress was considering a Bill for aid to the Dominican Republic.

And when someone suggested it would be easier to pay the money direct to Miss Gabor and Miss Novak the bubble burst.

Rafael issued an angry statement:

"This talk of romance with professional actresses leading to a possible marriage is nonsense. It is very insulting to me and my nation."

Said Miss Novak at the time:

"He's a real good will ambassador. He likes hamburgers and so do I."

A rather sour acquaintance said: "He will never amount to much, except the few million bucks his old man gives him to play with."

Now, fresh from the polo field, he has stepped high into his assassinated father's shoes and he has got whole country to play with.

The new strong man of the Dominican Republic is the only dictator who got his training on the playing fields of Hollywood.

His knowledge of tactics there is impeccable. But he never really caught on to military strategy at Fort Leavenworth.

QUALIFICATION

What training has he had for his role of strong man? Diplomacy? He was created an honorary ambassador when he was 20. Jurisprudence? They made him a doctor of laws at 22.

And it is hereby certified that he has been able to study his father's policies of repression since childhood.

The trouble was, Cliff didn't know whether Johnny was still at sea. And he couldn't remember the exact address.

"I'm pretty sure it were just 26 Highgate," he said, squeezing the lucky charm between powerful fingers. But there was no such address.

A NIGHT FOR THE GIRLS AT THE MIRAMAR

The long walk to Long Beach...

By JENNIFER
LANE

MONDAY night at the Miramar Convention Hall was an occasion simply bursting at the seams with fashion and femininity.

Beauty was the order of the evening—for this was the finals of the Miss International Beauty of Hongkong contest.

The brightly lit hall was crowded with a sophisticated audience who wined and dined as they watched.

Down the length of the long, long room ran the narrow stage and it must have been a lot of courage as the lights dimmed around the rest of us and the footlights came up on the carpeted ramp, for the first contestant to take the first step on that long, long walk under two thousand watchful eyes.

Striking

But the beautifully groomed and poised girls who paraded before us admirably showed how it should be done.

There were many striking fashions worn as the contestants paraded first in day wear, then playuits and finally in evening dress.

Glamorous Miss Betty Chao who came fourth in the contest.

Miss Mojida Razack, the second runner up, in a shaded blue playuit.

The winner of the title, Miss International Beauty of Hongkong 1962, Miss Judy Chang.

Beautiful Miss Angelo Ho who was unplaced in the contest.

A most striking evening gown worn by pretty Miss Helen Fu who was also unplaced in the contest.

Miss Ho again in an attractive Howard cheongsam.

DRAMAS OF THE ASHES

The Body-line War that finished Harold Larwood

HE WON THE ASHES AND LOST HIS ENGLAND PLACE

By JOHN MELVIN

Some critics called it body-line, others leg-theory. Both names described the fast-bowling escapades which boiled up into the greatest cricket controversy of all time—and even reached Government level.

In the season of 1932-33 Douglas Jardine and his MCC side touring Australia became the "villains" of cricket. Upon Jardine and a slim 5 ft. 8 in. ex-miner called Harold Larwood was poured the scorn and wrath of a nation.

Australian critics were up in arms at an English tactic devised, they claimed, at intimidating batsmen who could not be got out by fair methods.

The leg-theory attack—in which a bowler concentrates his deliveries on the leg-stump to make scoring more difficult—was introduced by Jardine and his team to re-test brilliant young Donald Bradman, the Australian run-scoring machine who had hit 924 runs in the previous series in England.

Either... or

It had become obvious to every cricket enthusiast in England that unless some means were devised to get Bradman out at a fairly cheap price the chances of winning the Ashes were virtually nil, and that the MCC team might just as well have stayed at home.

So leg-theory was introduced to be bowled in particular by the whippet-like "Little Leo" Larwood, the 28-year-old Nottinghamshire player, whose 90 mph express deliveries could send the balls spinning 70 yards or more.

At first there was little hint of the uproar to come. England began in great style, winning the first Test by ten wickets. Larwood's contribution was ten for 124 against a team weakened by Bradman's absence through ill-health.

Nor did the second Test—at Melbourne—provoke any demonstrations. Bradman reappeared, failed to score in the first innings, then hit 103 not out which helped the home country to victory by 111 runs. But the critics were already beginning to use the newly-coined ugly term of "body-line."

The storm really broke during the third Test at Adelaide. England, beginning badly, lost four wickets in reaching 37, but recovered so well that they were eventually able to total 341.

The boiling point

Australia started equally badly. With Larwood's attacking field set close on the leg side ready to gobble up the merest chance, the home team tumbled to 51 for four.

Then came the incident that brought the "Body-line" bowlers to boiling point. Australian captain Bill Woodfull was hit over the heart by the last ball of Larwood's second over. Woodfull carried on after a short rest and almost immediately Bradman was out—caught at short-leg off a Larwood express.

Incensed at seeing their chief batsmen dismissed cheaply, the 50,000-strong Adelaide crowd booed and jeered. Each step of Larwood's 20-odd strides to the wicket brought a howl of derision.

Worse was to come when Bert Oldfield, the Australian Carragh, June 21. Your Highness, a 33-1 English-trained outsider, carried the pink and green colours of Mrs Stanhope Joel to victory in the Irish Derby here today.

The colt, a son of Champsire, won in a photo-finish by half a length from Soysambu, owned by Canadian Max Bell, with Haven a further 2½ lengths away third in a field of 10.

Your Highness, trained at Newmarket by Humphrey Cotterill, was ridden by Irish jockey Herbert Holmes.

The mile and half classic was worth nearly £8,000 to the winner. Next year, however, when it will be known as the Irish Sweepstakes Derby, it is likely to be worth over £60,000 and will become Europe's richest prize.

Famous remark

Although an X-ray revealed a skull fracture, Oldfield survived "little Leo" from blame. Larwood and Jardine were both the subjects of Press criticism; at one stage Larwood was even called a "murderer".

Hero

Yet such was the excitement of the fourth Test at Brisbane that the body-line business was pushed temporarily into the background. The English hero was little Eddie Paynter, the Lancashire left-hander, who was only included in the tour party because Duleepsinhji was unable to go.

Australia made 340 in their first innings. Paynter, who contracted tonsillitis, lay in a hospital bed with a temperature that waivered near the hundred mark. England made a shaky start, losing five for 188.

Despite protests from the staff, Paynter decided to bat. He left hospital in pyjamas and dressing gown, walking to the wicket when "Gubby" Allen was eighth out at 216.

For more than three hours Paynter defied the Australian attack under a broiling sun. He was not out 24 at the close. After spending the night back at hospital, courageous Eddie returned to the wicket to continue the fight.

With Hedley Verity as his partner, Paynter fought on to 80 out of ninth-wicket stand of 112 before Bert Ironmonger claimed his wicket.

Australians were tumbled out for 176. In their second innings, England scored the runs needed for the loss of only four wickets. And the man who made the winning hit was little Eddie Paynter, who cracked McCabe over the square-leg ropes for six.

Larwood showed his paces as batsman in the fifth Test at Sydney, scoring 98 attractive runs before being caught. He was given sympathetic applause by the crowd for missing his century so narrowly, and it looked as though the unfortunate body-line episode had been a storm in a tea-cup.

Agreement

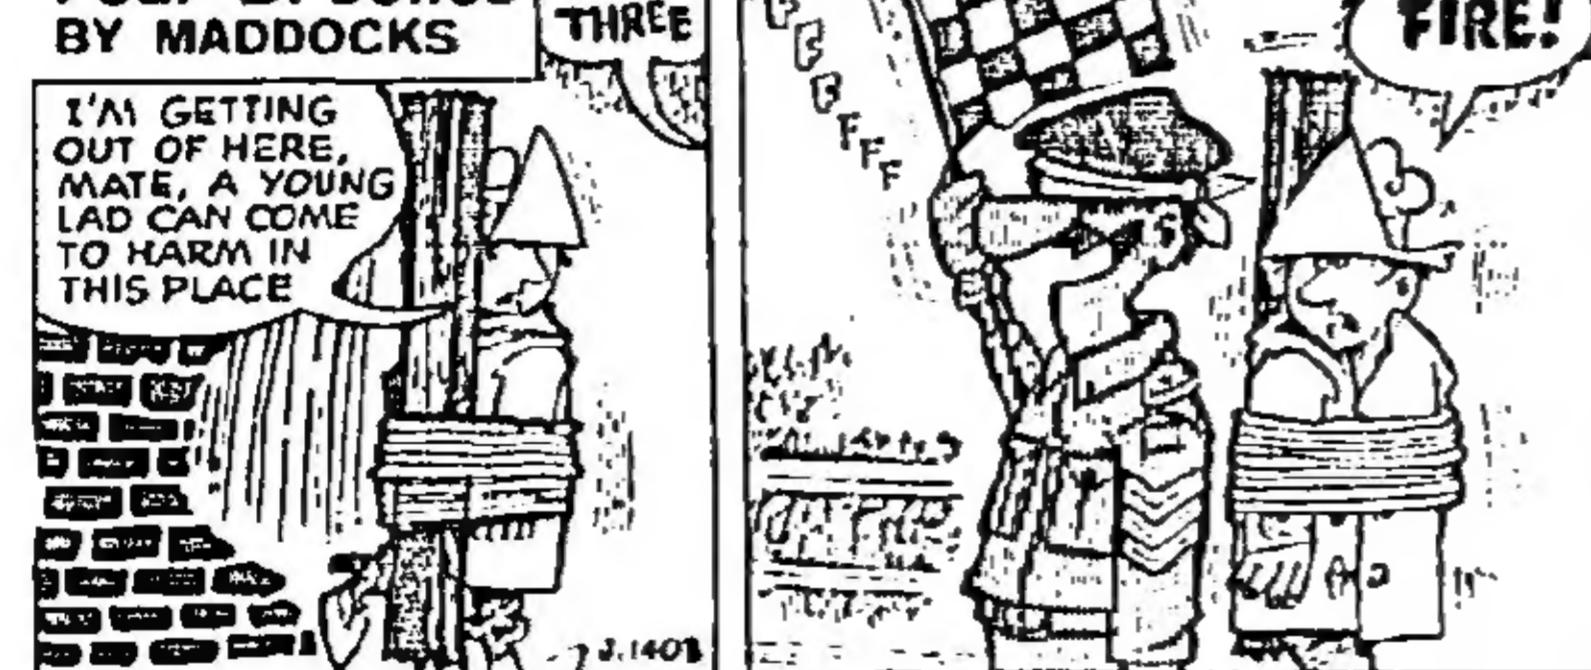

The optimists were wrong. While the rest of the MCC went on to New Zealand to complete the tour, Larwood and the Nawab of Pataudi left Sydney by train to catch the boat home.

More than 100 hooligans boarded the train and tried unsuccessfully to force their way into Larwood's compartment. They had to be content with hurling abuse.

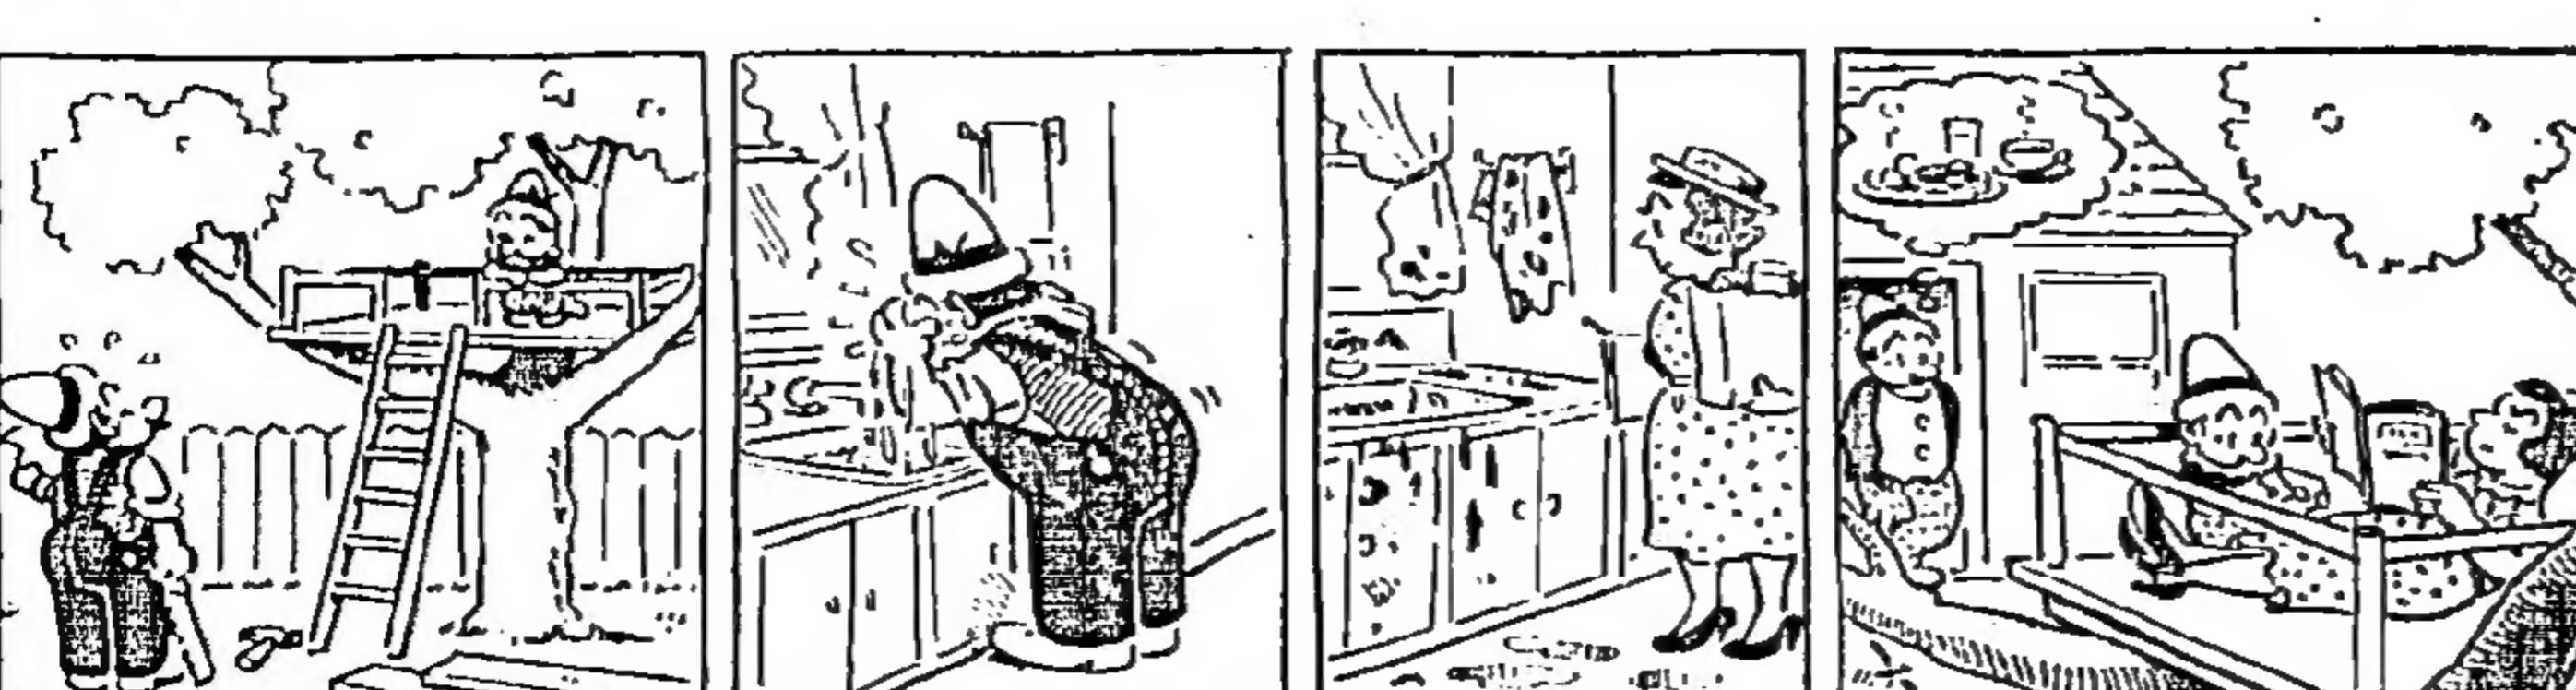

Larwood, who had taken 33 wickets in the five Tests and was chiefly responsible for England bringing back the Ashes said he would never visit Australia again.

But time is a great healer of wounds. In 1950, Harold Larwood returned to Australia where he was once "Public Enemy No. 1"—and made his home there.

SWIM IN A DAY

By CHARLES STEPHEN

How long does it take to learn to swim? "Twenty-four hours" says Gerald Forsberg in his "First Strokes in Swimming" (Routledge and Kegan Paul, 12s 6d).

Advocating three-quarters of an hour lessons on alternate days, Mr Forsberg says that after about 24 hours the beginner should be able to swim 50 yards.

He points out that this is an average figure. If you are below average do not worry. Take heart from the statement by world backstroke record-breaker Margaret Edwards. In "Swimming" (Stanley Paul, 25s), she says: "I did not learn to swim in just a couple of minutes. It took me a whole year going to the baths practically every day." She was then 10 years ago.

another American coach, Phil Moriarity.

Finally, for the really technical-minded water-lover, whose equipment may include mask, fins, snorkel, weight belts, depthgauges, knife, goggles, compass, diving lung and ear plugs, I recommend "Basic Scuba" (Van Nostrand, 64s).

Written by Fred Roberts, world's deepest diver on air, it tells everything one can possibly want to know about Scuba-Self Contained Underwater Breathing Apparatus and other equipment used in diving for sport.

Illustrated

It is difficult to choose between recently-published books on swimming. But for students of stroke-craft, I must nominate "How to Swim Well" (Hodder and Stoughton, 21s), written by Charles Saye, the American coach who has taught about 75,000 people to swim, and Charles Champlin. It is so superbly illustrated.

The importance of illustrations is also well recognised in "Springboard Diving" (Nicholas Kaye, 30s), by

New building planned for Central area

A new 17-storey building for the proposed redevelopment of the site of Nos 259-265, Des Voeux-road Central was the subject of a tenancy application heard this morning by Mr W. Aneurin-Jones, Tenancy Tribunal President.

The Ka Wah Bank Ltd, represented by Mr F. H. B. Wong, plan to replace the present four-storey buildings put up about 30 years ago, by a modern reinforced concrete structure with accommodation for bank premises on the ground and first floors.

Mr David Y. K. Wong, authorised architect, designed the scheme which is estimated to cost $1,550,000. Construction will take about 18 months. If the exemption application is approved.

Mr Harry Siu, bank director, gave evidence of the financial capability to carry out the scheme on the site which is near to the Hongkong Western Market and covers an area of 1,466 square feet.

PRESENT PREMISES

The present premises in four lots, houses, offices and domestic tenants. Much of the living space is sub-divided by light partitions into cubicles and bed spaces.

The new building will increase the floor space from 16,000 square feet to 55,000 square feet and provide office accommodation on the upper floors. Air-conditioning will be provided by a central system to the banking premises. There will be two staircases leading from the ground floor to the roof and two modern lifts able to accommodate 16 passengers each.

Sitting with the President are Tribunal members Mrs Tseng Ts'o Lai Ki and Mr H. M. Howell. A decision is expected later today.

Revenue Man retiring from govt service

Mr Leung Tung-chun, Assessor, Grade II of the Inland Revenue Department is retiring after 33 years and ten months' service with the Hongkong Government.

The Acting Commissioner of Inland Revenue, Mr C. W. Norris, will make a presentation to Mr Leung on behalf of his friends and colleagues at a brief ceremony tomorrow afternoon.

Mr Leung has accepted a contract offered by the Sarawak Government to join its newly organised Inland Revenue Department. He will be leaving Hongkong shortly to take up the new post.

EXAMINATION

Mr Leung joined the Hongkong Government Treasury as a temporary clerk on Dec. 8, 1927. During the first 14 years of his service with the Government, he took and passed various examinations for interpreters and translators, and obtained a number of diplomas in book-keeping and allied commercial subjects.

He obtained second place in world standing when he passed the examination of the Institute of Book-keepers, London.

A week ago, Ho's mother had asked Mr K. A. S. Phillips to send her son to a training centre because she said, he always mixed with teddy boys and often hit her and her husband.

Ho was then remanded by Mr Phillips until today to see whether he was suitable for a training centre.

WEAVER CHARGED WITH WORKING RADIO STATION WITHOUT LICENCE

A 34-year-old weaver appeared before Mr Derek Cons at Central Magistracy this morning on a charge of working a radio communication station without a licence.

The defendant, Lee Chi-hung, of 18 Chap Fat Village, Shamshui-po, is also charged with possessing radio communication apparatus without a licence.

Lee is alleged to have committed the offence on June 20 at Glenbrook Farm, Wong Chuk Hang, Aberdeen.

In his possession, it is alleged, were one radio receiving set, one radio transmitting set, one power unit, one Morse key and one set of earphones.

The new building will increase the floor space from 16,000 square feet to 55,000 square feet and provide office accommodation on the upper floors. Jailed 10 months for cheating other hawkers

A hawker who obtained money from other unlicensed hawkers pretending that he was doing it for the Police, was jailed for 10 months by Mr Derek Cons at Central Magistracy this morning.

The 32-year-old man, Ho Choi, pleaded guilty but begged for leniency, saying that he had a wife and two children to support. He also had to remit money to his parents in China, he said.

Mr Cons told Ho that the poor hawkers who were cheated also had wives and children to look after.

Detective Inspector Lam Muk-sing of the Anti-Corruption Bureau, said that Ho himself was an unlicensed hawker selling Chinese jelly in Shamshui-po.

Shortly before 8 pm yesterday, Insp. Lam said, Ho was seen by policemen collecting $2 (in 50-cent coins) from an unlicensed goldfish hawker, Lam Chun-ting, in Pei Ho-street. Ho had been collecting money from Lam for several months, saying that it was for the police.

Ho was later observed collecting $1.50 from a woman hawker near the Pei Ho Theatre and arrested.

Ho had seven previous convictions, including one for being a member of a triad society.

Seaman warned on drunk charge

Defendant was in such a filthy condition he had to be cleaned up before being taken to Queen Mary Hospital, Insp. Godden said.

U.S. allows imports of preserved ducks under new scheme

Exports of preserved ducks to the United States, suspended since Feb. 1, last year, will be resumed shortly under a new comprehensive certification procedure, the Director of Commerce and Industry, Mr H. A. Angus, announced today.

The new procedure coming into effect on Monday is based on a rigid health inspection control system that requires the assistance of the Agriculture and Forestry Department. Agreement on the procedure has been reached with the Foreign Assets Control of the United States Treasury.

The Foreign Assets Control, with the concurrence of the American Department of Agriculture, has agreed to allow ducks preserved at a newly established processing plant on Lantau Island to enter the country, when they are supported by Comprehensive Certificates of Origin issued by the Commerce and Industry Department.

Applications for registration under the new procedure will be accepted by the department immediately.

However, approval of individual processing plants is dependent upon the ability of the plants to conform to the American health requirements.

A STANDSTILL

"It will, therefore, be necessary for this aspect to be considered by the American Department of Agriculture in respect of each plant under consideration," Mr Angus explained.

Exports of preserved ducks to the United States came to a standstill last year when the American Department of Agriculture implemented health regulations affecting the rendering, slaughtering and processing of all poultry and poultry products within the country and in all other countries exporting the products to America.

At that time, none of the Colony's processing plants could comply with these regulations.

Quarrel led to stabbing

A 39-year-old sewing worker, Kam Chi of 394 Castle Peak-road 4th floor, was fined $75 by Mr T. C. Chan at North Kowloon Magistracy this morning when he admitted stabbing a fellow worker with a pair of scissors.

Insp. Wong Hei-man, prosecuting, said both the defendant and the complainant, Tang Chan-chu, were working at 27 On Chau-street first floor.

Yesterday, the two were sitting alongside the same work bench when they had a quarrel over a trivial matter.

She rushed to answer, slipped on a throw rug on a newly-polished floor and hit her head against a door jamb.

She died instantly of head injuries, ruled Coroner Paul E. Kubasko.—AP.

Tang was sent to Kowloon hospital for treatment, but was discharged later the same day.

Sudden death

Seratten, June 21. Mrs Mary Rosehill, 56, was resting on a couch on Tuesday night when she heard the telephone ring.

She rushed to answer, slipped on a throw rug on a newly-polished floor and hit her head against a door jamb.

She died instantly of head injuries, ruled Coroner Paul E. Kubasko.—AP.

Tang was sent to Kowloon hospital for treatment, but was discharged later the same day.

"There was no idea of overriding local law. He suggested that any person who possessed local naturalisation in any Dominion and who had resided for five years in any part of the Empire should be able to apply for certificate of Imperial Naturalisation.

"The application would have to be endorsed by responsible Minister of the Dominion in which he has resided during the previous 12 months. The certificate would be issued through the Governor. The Dominion would be left free to grant local nationality on such terms as they thought fit."

"The validity and effectiveness of local law regulating immigration and differentiating between classes of British subjects would remain unaffected. Mr Churchill promised to draft an Imperial Bill in conformity with these principles."

"Mr Harcourt emphasised the fact that the acquisition of naturalisation elsewhere would not entitle a man to rights in South Africa from which he has been previously excluded by laws relating to colour or anything else. Mr Churchill moved a resolution approving a scheme based on his proposals, and it was carried unanimously."
